

Good morning everyone. I am Rachel Harington and welcome to Your News.

What a night for the Iron Man. Australia is still thanking the giant for firstly of course, saving the whole world but also for letting Australia see a new side of him. Over to Bob Stuart who is standing next to where the burning girder was placed.

Well, what happened yesterday was a heart skipping experience for the engineers and all the people of Australia being scared out of their lives. I can still feel the tension and hot feeling in the exact same space where the iron man was lying on the girders above the burning fuel oil. He survived the impossible but the bat-angel-dragon did not. He gave up on the third flight to the sun because he knew he would burn to death.

The whole perimeter is being searched for any remaining jewels from the awful burned dragon. Why the dragon had sapphires and rubies inside of him we don't know but we are sure that they were priceless jewels and not fakes. How the dragon was made, we don't know, but scientists are searching for any remains of his skin to see if he is any kind of species they can recognise. We are not sure about the exact location of the iron man but we know he is happy munching away on iron.

I have been lucky enough to meet with the Iron Man to hear from him directly. He has told me that it was hard to keep smiling because he was in pain and his ear was melting. He also said that he was a little bit scared because he knew that there was a risk that he would burn and never be seen again.

He wanted to say that he is very thankful that he saved the world because if he didn't then all of his iron would be gone and he wouldn't live. The last thing he wanted to say was if Hogarth wouldn't have been there for him, he wouldn't have completed this challenge, so really Hogarth was the one who saved the whole world.

We also got to speak to a few of the engineers who watched the whole thing live! One of them said that they felt so scared they nearly fainted. The boss engineer was the most scared because it was his fault that the iron man's ear burnt. The engineer told the iron man he was really sorry and that he would pay for the iron man to get it repaired but the iron man said that it was okay and that mistakes happen. We were probably luckiest people in the world to be able to speak to him privately.

We are still thanking the iron man for saving the whole world. We still don't know if the iron man trusts the dragon because he did do a very bad thing. But we do know that after the perimeter has been searched from bottom to the top there will be tourists jamming in to take pictures of the threatening place.

We are finally trying to find out how the Music of the Spheres was made, because we never knew about this sound and it is very new to earth atmosphere. The Iron Man has actually just seen Hogarth and by seeing the picture the newsroom sent us, he is very happy to be in his scrapyards and Hogarth is just delighted to be friends with the lifesaving hero.

Thank you Rachel, and of course if the iron man is watching the news thank you for saving the whole world and of course, us people. Back to you Rachel.

Wow Bob, that must have been the most intense news and intense day anyone had ever seen. Let's just hope that the dragon doesn't get too excited about visiting the earth again and just keeps on playing beautiful music.
